

Document 0413

[20413004]

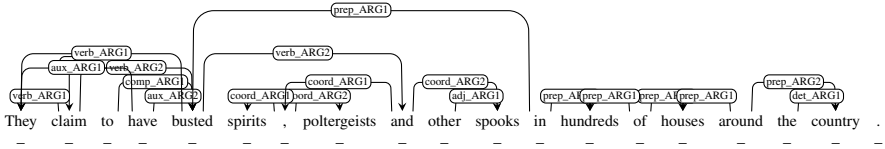

For starters, some people call Ed and Lorraine Warren.

[20413005]

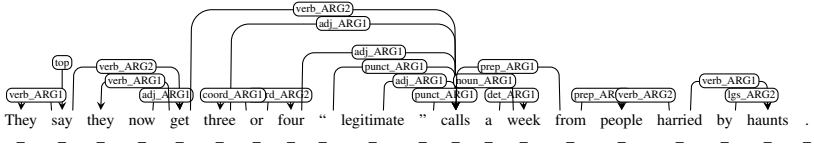

When it comes to busting ghosts, the Monroe, Conn., couple are perfect demons.

[20413006]

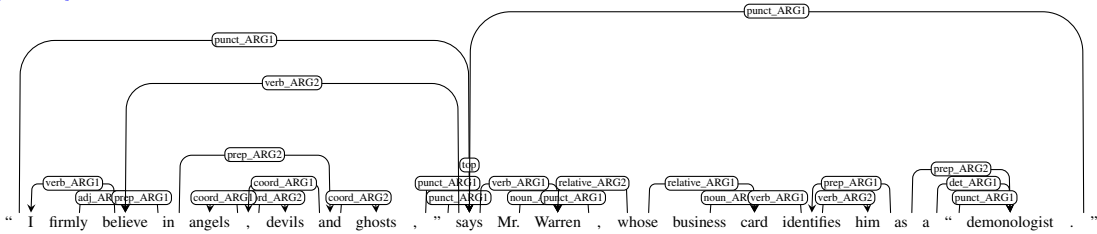

They claim to have busted spirits, poltergeists and other spooks in hundreds of houses around the country.

[20413007]

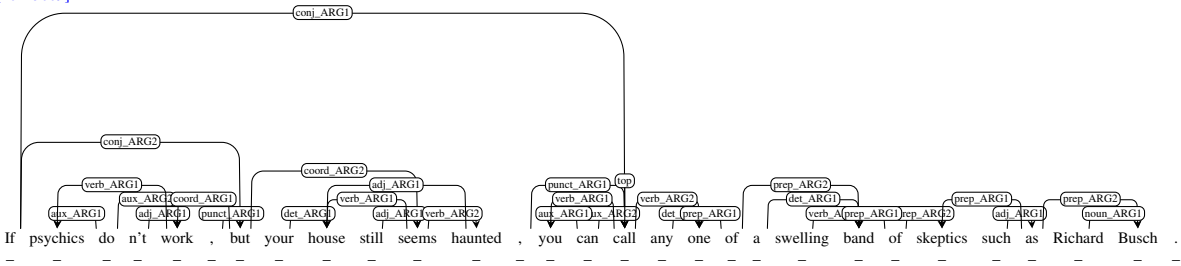

They say they now get three or four "legitimate" calls a week from people harried by haunts.

[20413008]

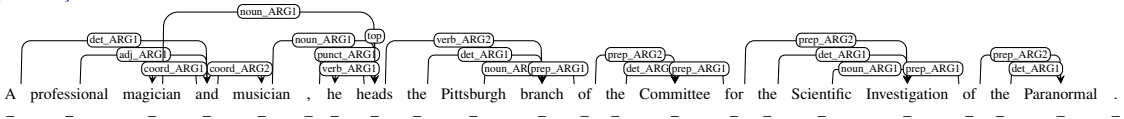

"I firmly believe in angels, devils and ghosts," says Mr. Warren, whose business card identifies him as a "demonologist."

[20413009]

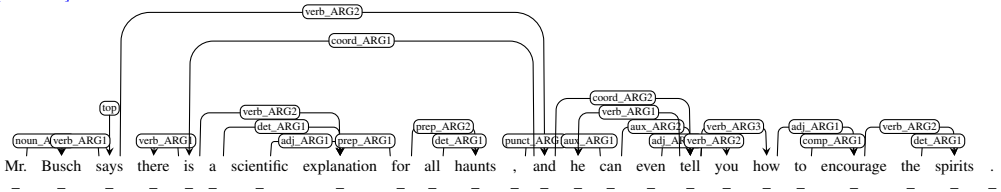

If psychics do n't work, but your house still seems haunted, you can call any one of a swelling band of skeptics such as Richard Busch.

[20413010]

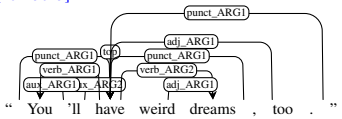

A professional magician and musician, he heads the Pittsburgh branch of the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of the Paranormal.

[20413011]

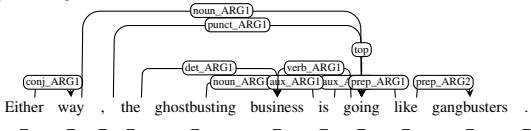

Mr. Busch says there is a scientific explanation for all haunts, and he can even tell you how to encourage the spirits.

[20413013]

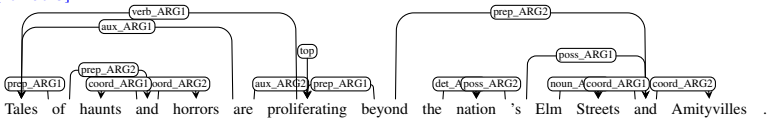

"You'll have weird dreams, too."

[20413014]

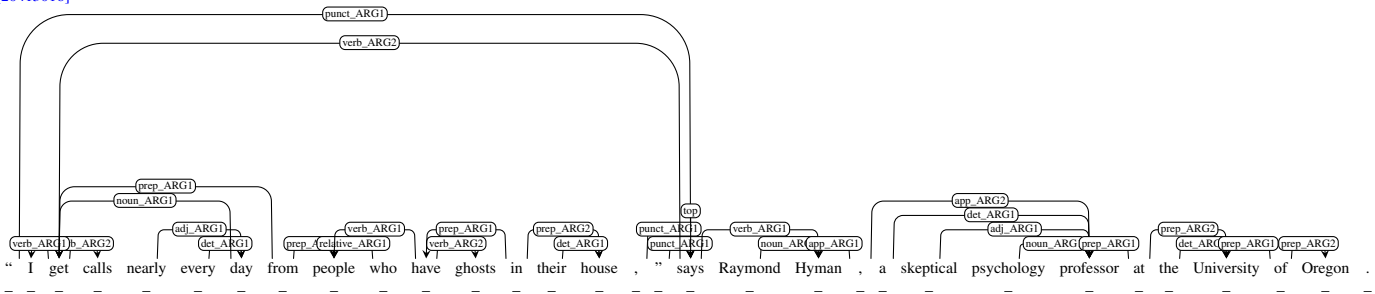

Either way, the ghostbusting business is going like gangbusters.

[20413015]

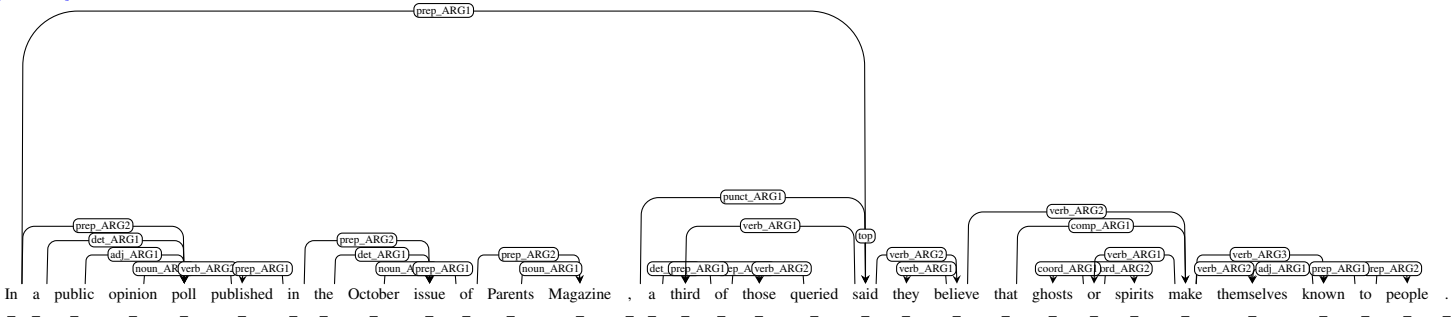

Tales of haunts and horrors are proliferating beyond the nation's Elm Streets and Amityvilles.

[20413016]

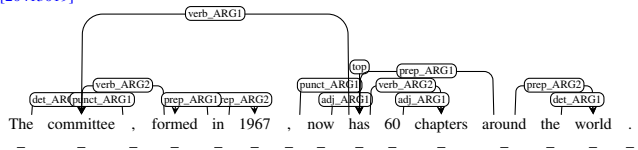

"I get calls nearly every day from people who have ghosts in their house," says Raymond Hyman, a skeptical psychology professor at the University of Oregon.

[20413017]

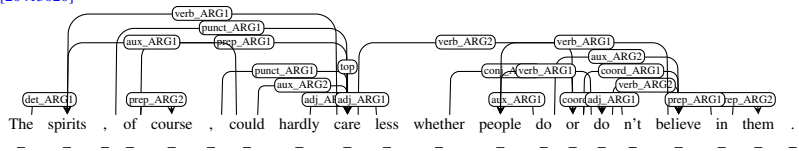

In a public opinion poll published in the October issue of Parents Magazine, a third of those queried said they believe that ghosts or spirits make themselves known to people.

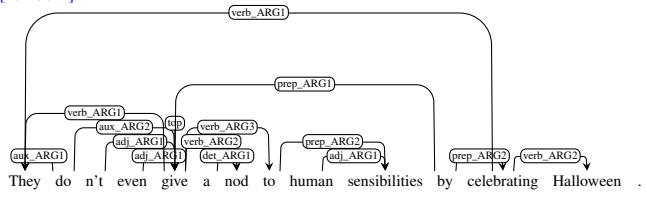

[20413019]

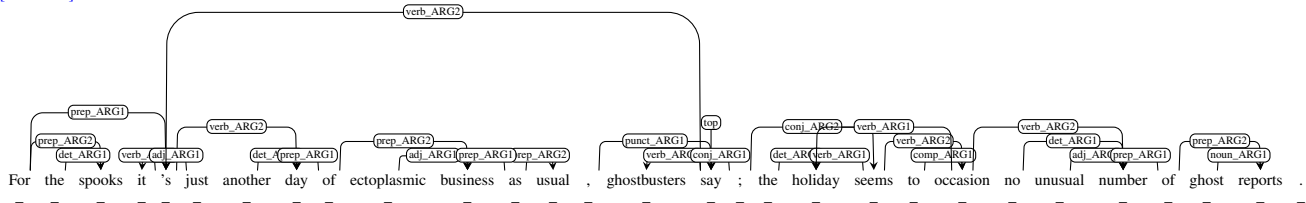

[20413020]

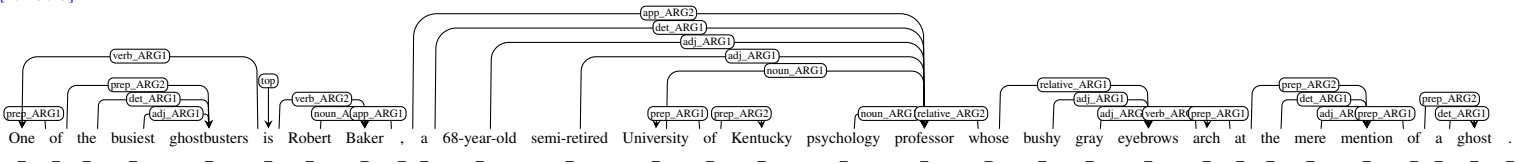

[20413021]

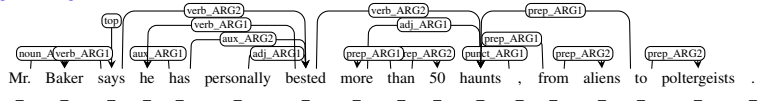

[20413022]

[20413023]

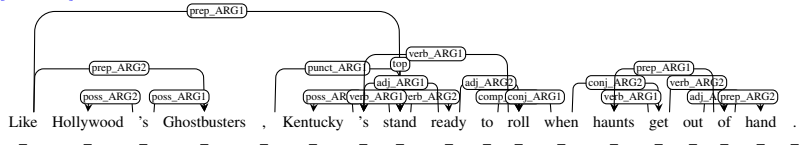

[20413024]

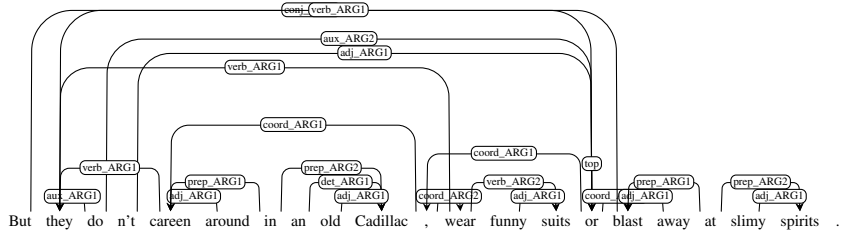

[20413025]

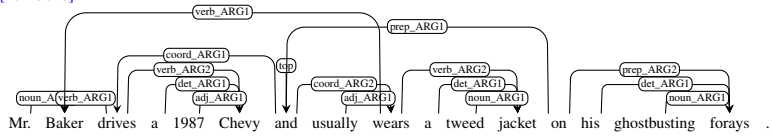

[20413026]

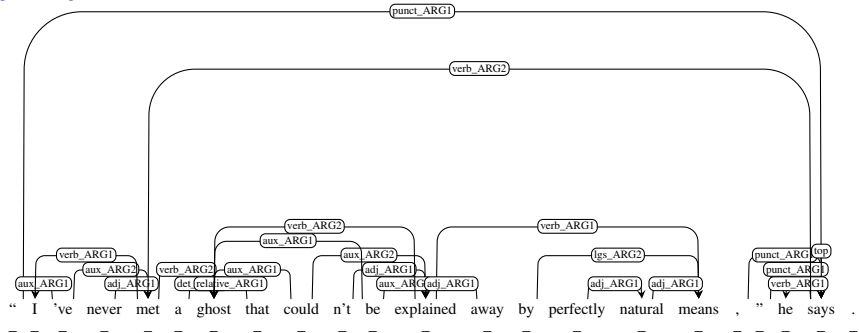

[20413027]

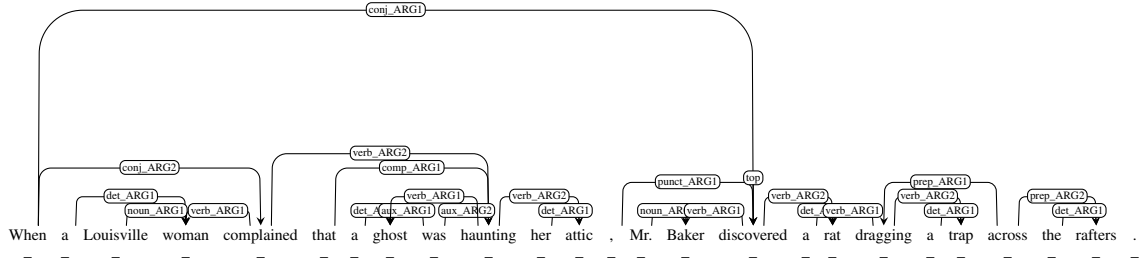

[20413028]

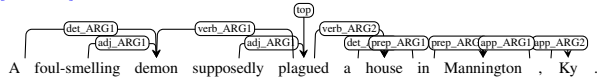

[20413029]

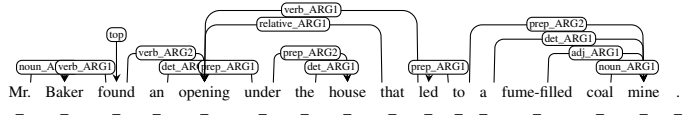

[20413030]

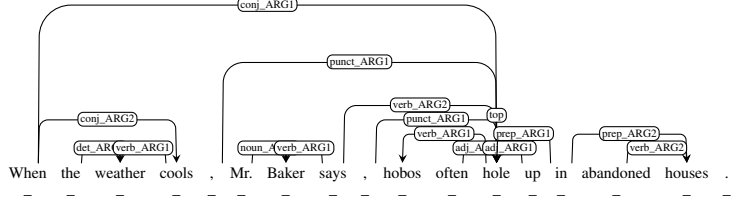

[20413031]

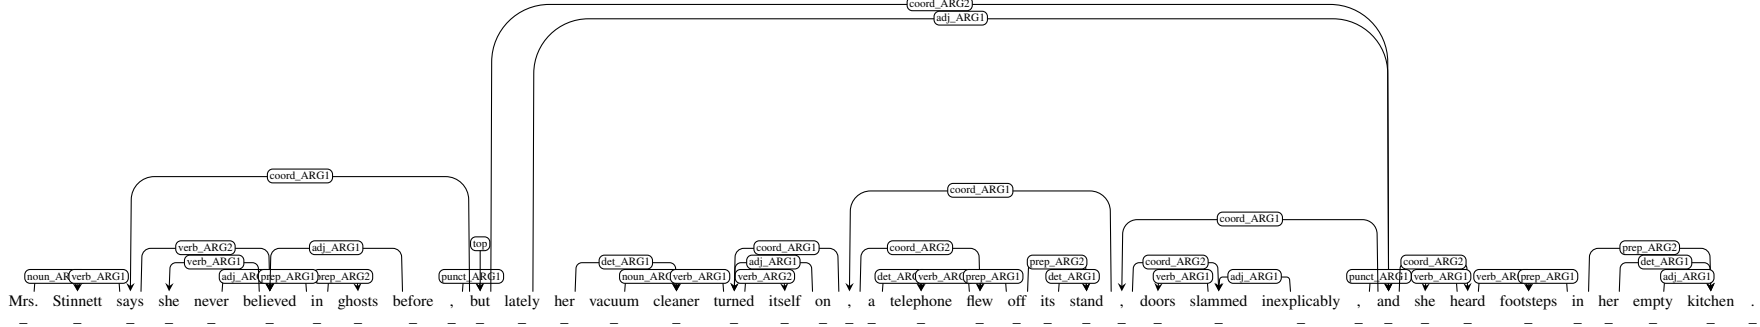

[20413032]

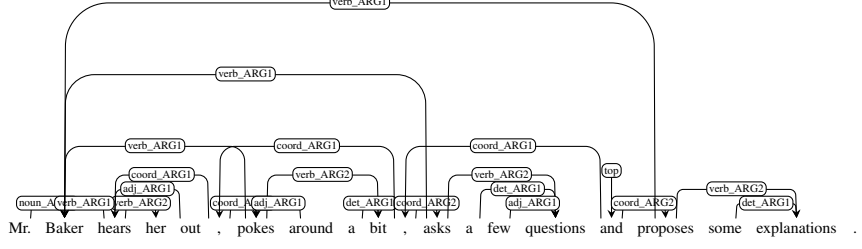

[20413033]

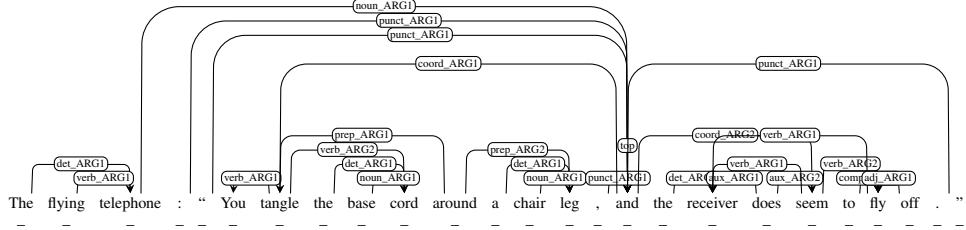

[20413036]

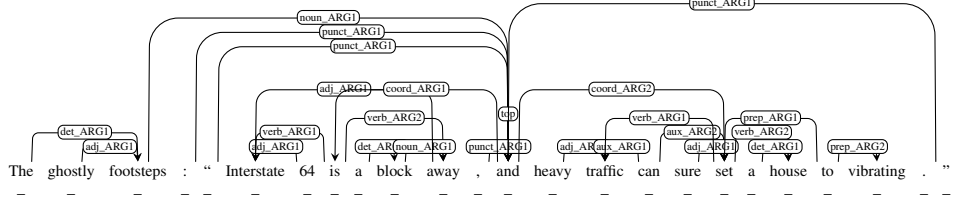

[20413038]

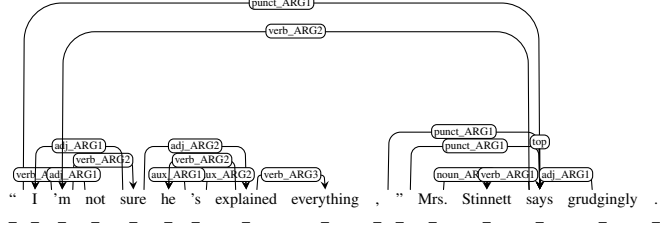

[20413040]

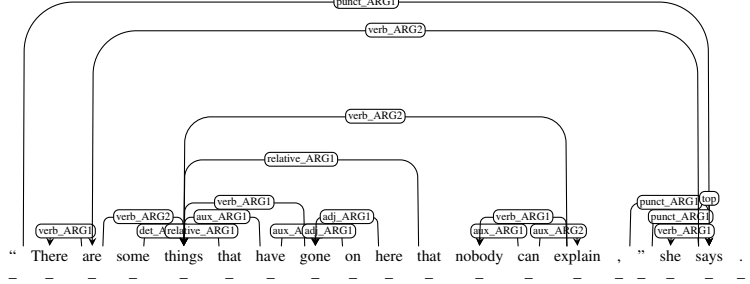

[20413041]

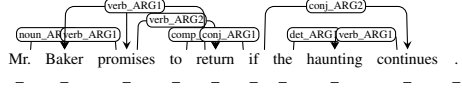

[20413042]

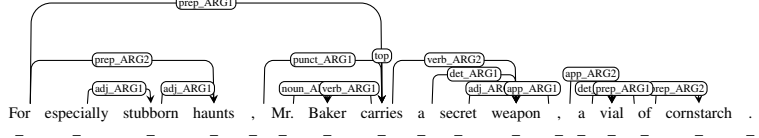

[20413043]

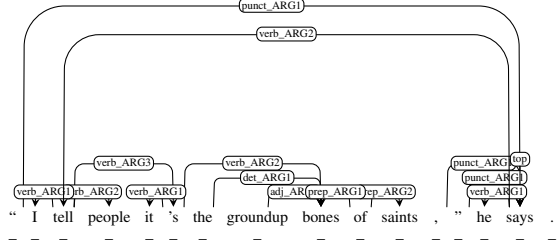

[20413044]

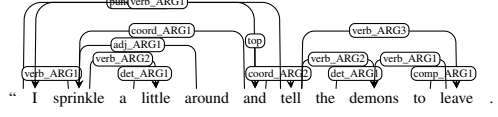

[20413045]

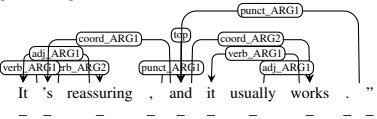

[20413046]

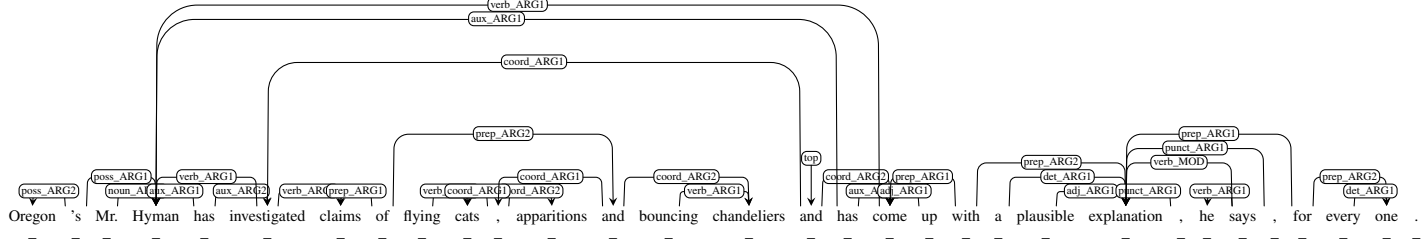

[20413047]

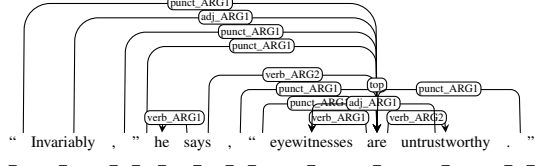

[20413048]

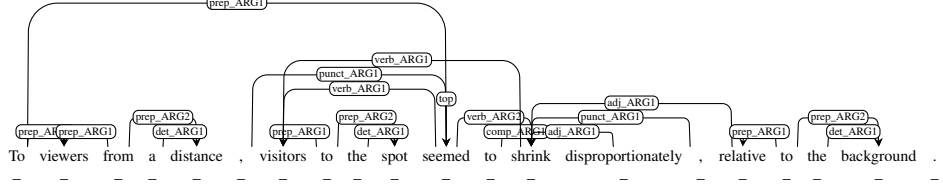

[20413049]

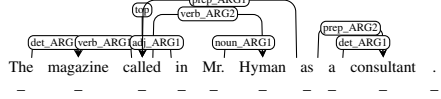

[20413050]

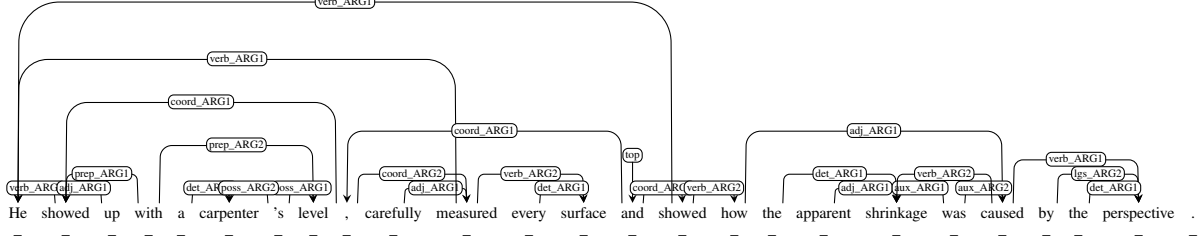

[20413052]

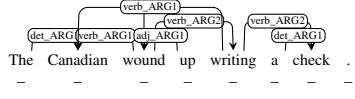

[20413053]

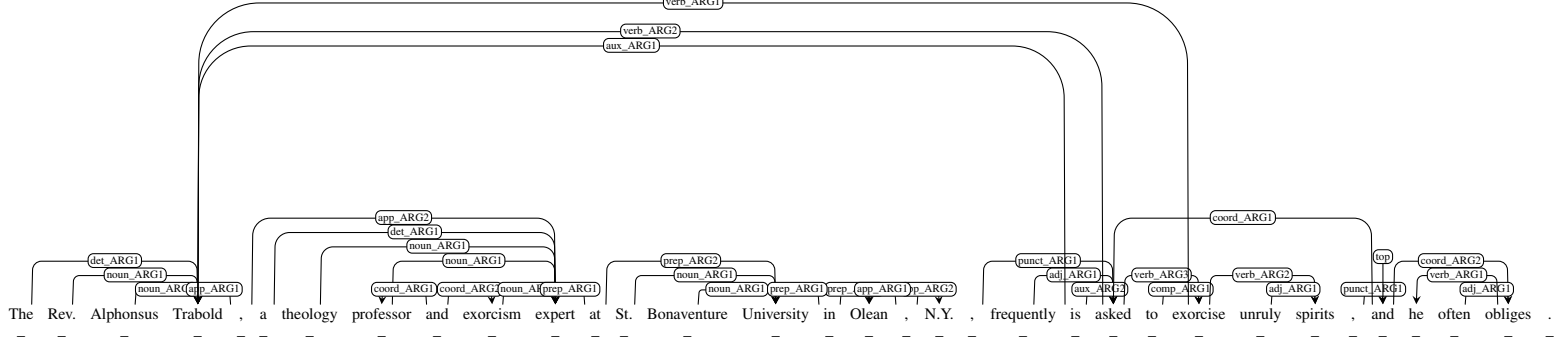

[20413054]

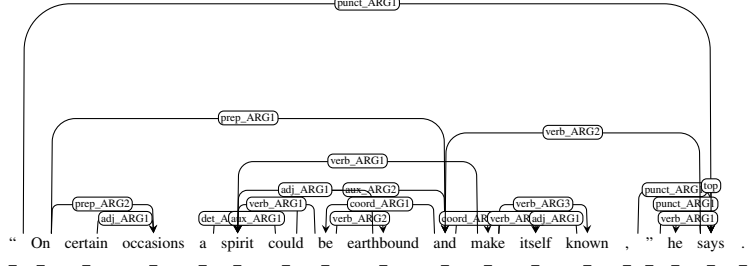

[20413056]

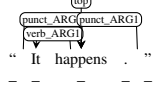

[20413057]

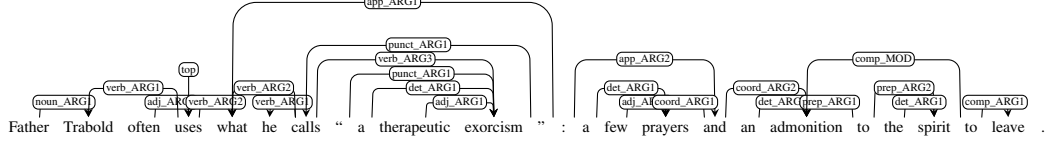

[20413058]

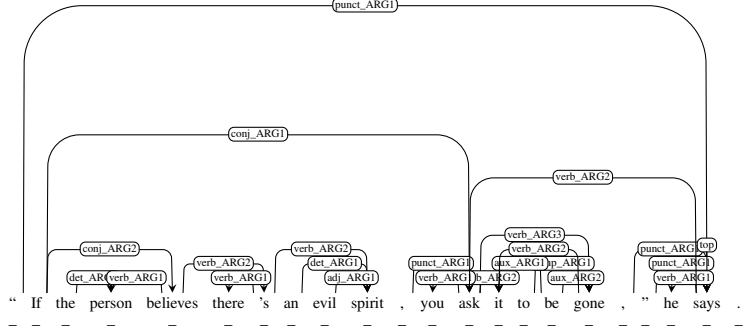

[20413059]

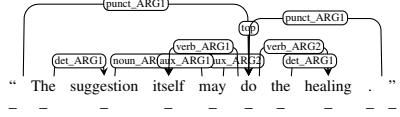

[20413060]

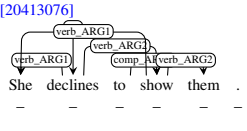

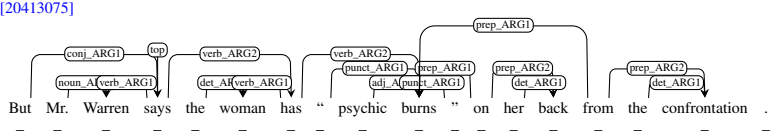

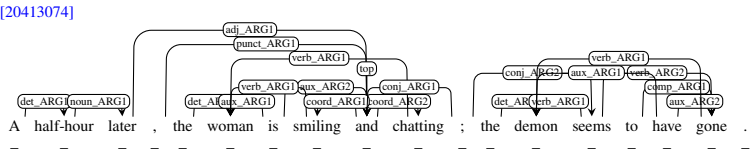

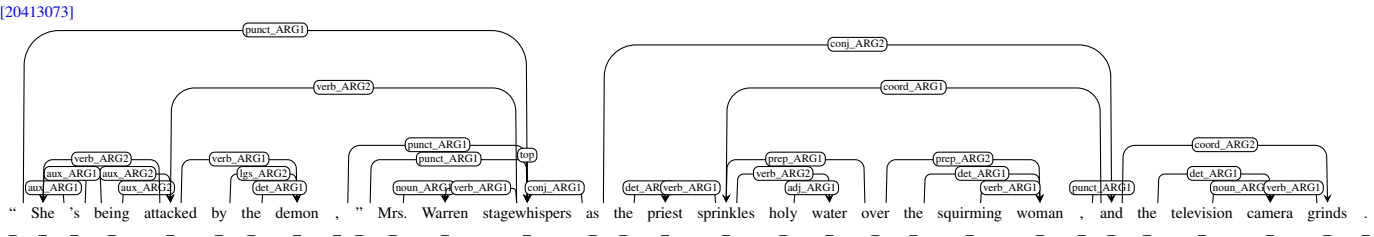

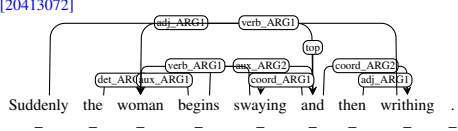

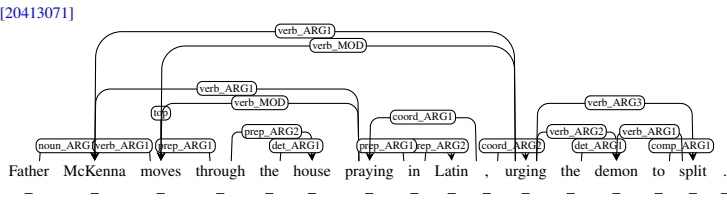

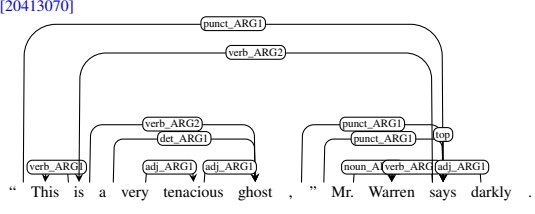

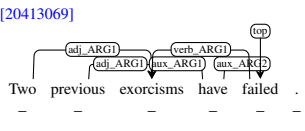

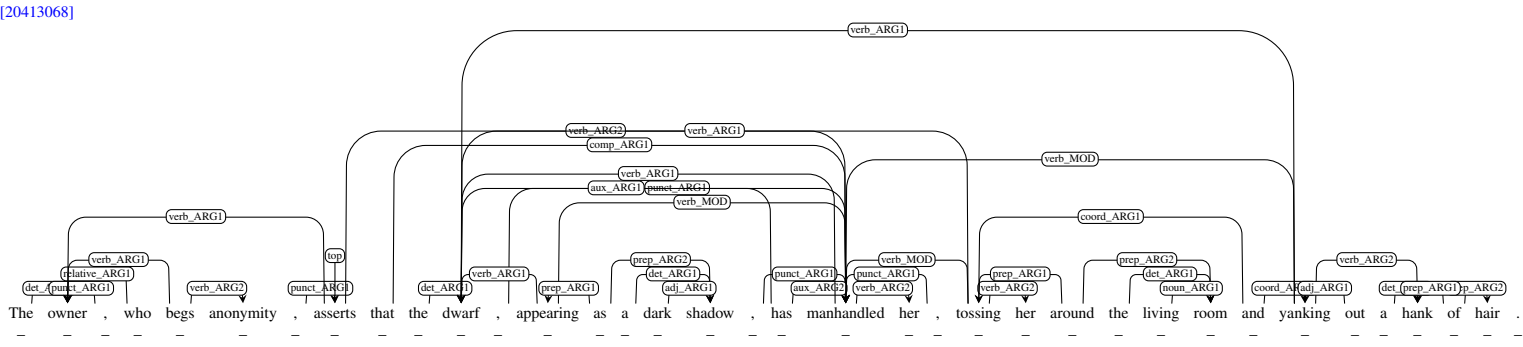

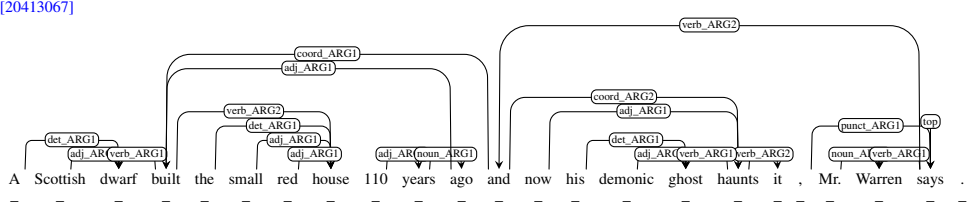

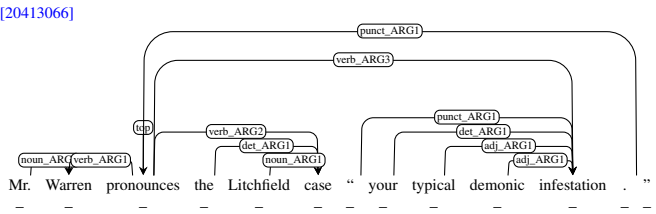

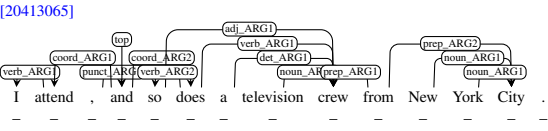

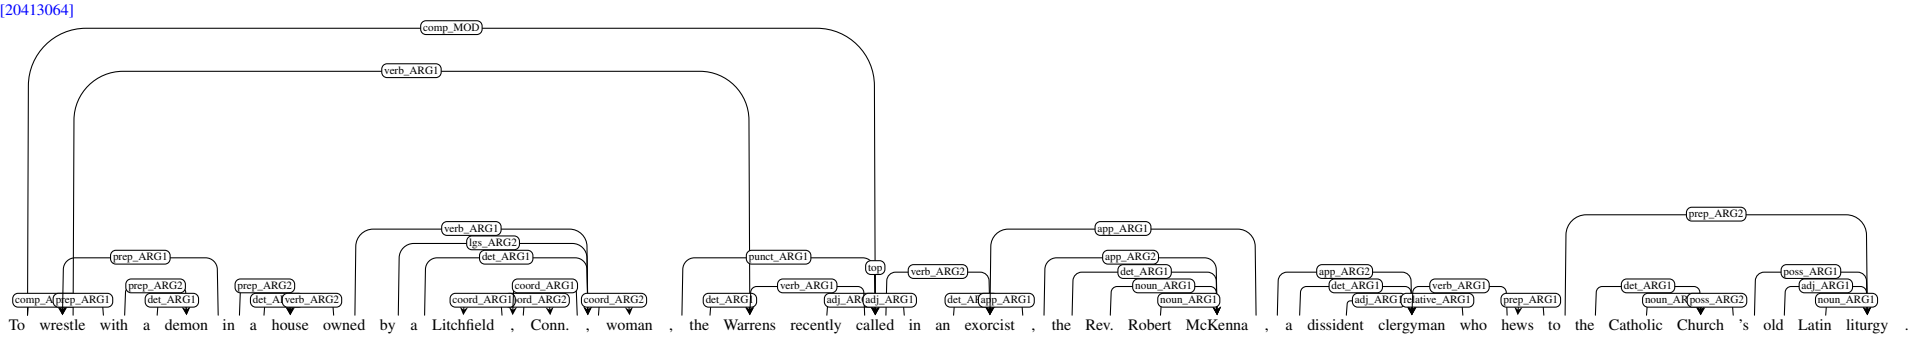

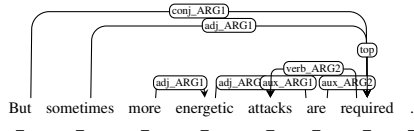

[20413061]

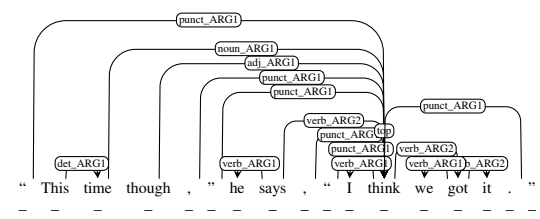

[20413062]

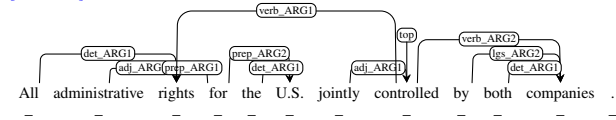

[20413063]

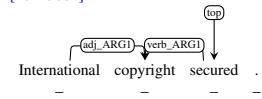

[20413078]

[20413080]

[20413081]

[20413083]

