Figure 1 illustrates a dependency parse tree for the sentence: "At one point, the reader ev-w218r7_u_nobody is two steps ahead of Marlowe in catching ev-w463f2 on to a double identity scam - and Marlowe is supposed to be ev-w3263f2 the pro". The tree structure shows hierarchical groupings of words into phrases, with arrows indicating grammatical dependencies. Key phrases identified include "At one point", "the reader", "two steps ahead", "of Marlowe", "in catching", "on to a double identity scam", and "Marlowe is supposed to be". The tree also shows the relationship between the main clause and the subordinate clause introduced by "and".

More bothersome, there are several apparent anachronisms.

A little more care in re-creating Marlowe 's universe would have made the book that much more enjoyable .

Figure 1: A parse tree for the sentence "Mr. Nolan is a contributing editor at Los Angeles Magazine." The root node is S, which branches into NP (Mr. Nolan), VP (is), and PP (at Los Angeles Magazine). The NP branches into RSTR (Mr.) and ACT-arg (Nolan). The VP branches into top (is) and PAT-arg (a contributing editor). The PP branches into RSTR (at) and NE (Los Angeles Magazine). The NE node branches into NE (Los) and NE (Angeles Magazine).
